LB 1085

dollar limit, and a lot of schools are, and so they can do it but they still got to have a supermajority of the votes of the school board to be able to do that. So that's something else, too. But far as getting back to the sales tax or the income tax side about, in agriculture right now, and I shouldn't be, you know, talking about agriculture all the time but I mean right now the income side of it would work better because there's no money out there right now, and there's... farmers and ranchers are not paying it, but the sales tax, you're always breaking down equipment and always got to buy repairs and always got the sales tax to pay. So I think the combination of the two would make it work so that we would be livable of it. So I'm still looking at it and trying to decide but, well, anyway we're coming around with a solution I think that might work. So thank you again, Senator.

SENATOR CUDABACK: Thank you, Senator Jones. I might say that the items...the candy that will be giving out currently are in recognition of Senator Erdman's birthday. So happy birthday, Senator. (Visitors introduced.) On with discussion of the Wickersham amendment, Senator Coordsen.

SENATOR COORDSEN: Thank you, Mr. President and members of the body. I do rise to support this amendment at this time, but more importantly, Senator Wickersham and I have engaged in the statistical dialog from time to time over the last weeks, and I really don't think anyone other than the two of us give a diddly-squat about what we're talking about. But when he mentions that Nebraska is comparable to the state of Kansas and the state of Iowa, and when you look at the type of revenues it would be most important to note the exceptions. Iowa and Kansas assess their agricultural property based upon its income-producing ability rather than purported sales price. Iowa and Kansas exempt farm equipment from personal property tax. Iowa and Kansas exempt, to the best of my knowledge, all equip...all farm equipment and repair parts and labor from sales tax, so I would think that there might be some small differences between the revenue systems of Nebraska, Kansas and Iowa, depending upon what your profession is. Thank you, Mr. President.
